30. Explain why today's teachers must carefully document their students' behavior and achievement. Why may a portfolio method be useful and what types of information may be included?

ANSWER:

To plan appropriate learning environments for children, teachers must collect as much information as possible. This documentation can provide a rich source of information to share with parents. A portfolio can provide an organizational system for information that is collected. A portfolio may contain a case study report, anecdotes, conference notes, interview reports, checklists, rating scales, and collections of children's work such as drawings and paintings, writing samples, and photos of completed projects.
